Triangle Hospital is the new specialist hospital for internal medicine being built in the Meilahti Hospital area in Helsinki. Ruukki supplied and installed the steel structures for the project and also installed the concrete elements.

Work on the frame of the building, and installation related to it, dictated the other phases of the project, which is why it was imperative for Ruukki's management and installation workers to be flexible and use their expertise so the project could proceed as planned and scheduled.

Ruukki constructed the hospital's steel frame by employing a new innovative WQ solution that forms a composite structure with the top grouting.
